1 2 I have before me a motion by the debtors, 3 , for an order holding their mortgage lender, Bank of 4 America, in contempt for violation of their discharge, under 5 sections 524 and 727 of the Bankruptcy Code. This case was 6 7 reopened under section 349 of the Bankruptcy Code for the sole purpose of permitting the debtors to bring this motion. 8 motion to reopen was on notice to Bank of America; the present 9 motion also was served on Bank of America, including on its 10 general counsel. 11 12 Both motions asserted a course of conduct pursuant to which Bank of America, with knowledge of the debtors' 13 bankruptcy and discharge (it was a scheduled creditor), 14 continued to send the debtors monthly statements in which it 15 sought to collect its debt from them. Those efforts, as will 16 17 be discussed in a moment, were not confined to informing the debtors what they needed to pay or otherwise do in order to 18 retain their house, on which Bank of America asserts a lien; 19 they also clearly involved collection on the debt personally 20 from the debtors. In addition, the motions referred to 21 numerous phone calls from agents of Bank of America who sought 22 to collect on the debt personally from the debtors. 23 Bank of America has not objected to the motion and 24 has not appeared at today's hearing to controvert the motion's 25

1 2 allegations or otherwise explain its conduct. 3 Although Bank of America was served with both 4 motions, and the debtors' counsel has represented that he has 5 diligently attempted to contact Bank of America to have it 6 7 cease sending such statements and making such phone calls, I have been provided with a recent statement showing that the 8 billing activity has continued since the service of the 9 10 motion. The law is clear that the Court has the power to 11 12 enforce the discharge which is set forth in this case in an order that is attached to this motion, and that a violation of 13 the discharge under section 524(a)(2) of the Bankruptcy Code 14 is punishable by contempt. See In re Nassoko, 405 B.R. 515, 15 520 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2009), and the cases cited therein. 16 Nassoko case also makes it clear that the enforcement of the 17 discharge order may be made by means of a contempt motion as 18 19 opposed to an adversary proceeding that would be governed by the Part VII rules of the Bankruptcy Code, id. at 526, citing 20 among other cases In re Texaco Inc. 182 B.R. 937, 945-46 21 (Bankr. SDNY 1995). So, procedurally, this motion is proper. 22 For a finding of contempt, the burden rests with the 23 movant to show by clear and convincing evidence that the 24 offending entity has knowledge, actual or constructive, of the 25

1 2 discharge and willfully violated it by continuing with the 3 activity complained of. Id. at 520 quoting In re Torres, 367 4 B.R. 478, 490 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2007). And Nassoko also stands 5 for the proposition that compensatory damages, in addition to, 6 of course, sanctions, may be awarded as a sanction for civil 7 contempt if a party willfully violates the section 524(a)(2) 8 injunction. 9 Attorney's fees may also be awarded if, in addition 10 to willfully disobeying the Court's order, the party acts in 11 12 bad faith, vexatiously, wantonly or for oppressive reasons. Id., citing In re Dabrowski, 257 B.R. 394, 416 (Bankr. 13 S.D.N.Y. 2001). 14 Here, in this context for this type of relief, 15 willfulness consists of knowingly going forward with 16 17 collection activity in respect of an in personam debt knowing or having reason to know that the debtor was in bankruptcy and 18 has received a discharge. That's certainly alleged here, and 19 it's consistent with the facts, which show that Bank of 20 America was provided with notice of both the bankruptcy and 21 the discharge as well as the fact that the collection activity 22 continued after this case was reopened for the specific 23 purpose of enforcing the discharge and after this motion was 24 25 filed.

1 2 3 The lender here, which asserts a mortgage on the debtors' house, has the ability to enforce that mortgage and 4 may inform a debtor of that right and may give a debtor 5 information to establish how the debtor can avoid the 6 7 enforcement of the mortgage, i.e. paying the debt or negotiating a settlement or modification of the debt. That is 8 because a discharge is of in personam debt and does not affect 9 a creditor's lien rights. However, and the law is clear on 10 this, unless the lender's communications with the debtor 11 12 clearly and conspicuously make that distinction - that is, if the communications to the debtor instead simply say, "You need 13 to pay this debt", the lender will be in contempt of the 14 discharge injunction. See, for example, In re Stuart, 2010 15 Bankr. Lexis 2041 at *3 (Bankr. N.D. Cal., June 21, 2010); In 16 re Harlan, 402 B.R. 703, 714-16 (Bankr. W.D. Va., 2009); In re 17 Anderson, 348 B.R. 652, 661 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006); In re 18 19 Curtis, 322 B.R. 470, 484-85 (Bankr. D. Mass 2005). This distinction should be particularly clear to 20 Bank of America, since the District Court for the Western 21 District of Virginia has twice ruled that where Bank of 22 America did clearly make notice in its billing to a debtor 23 that the bill was solely for information purposes in respect 24 of the enforcement of the lien, as opposed to for any other 25

1 2 purpose, and it made it clear that the debt itself was 3 discharged, it would not be in contempt of a discharge order, 4 but otherwise would have been. See Pearson v. Bank of 5 America, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94850 at *14-16 (W.D. Va. July 6 10, 2012) and Anderson v. Bank of America, 2012 U.S. Dist. 7 LEXIS 95309 at *8-10 (W.D. Va. July 11, 2012). 8 I have reviewed the statements sent by Bank of 9 America to the debtors that are attached as exhibits to the 10 contempt motion before me, going through June 1, 2013. Each 11 12 of them fails to make the distinction that Bank of America obviously knows how to make because they made it in the 13 Pearson and Anderson cases that I just cited. They say 14 nothing about the debtors' discharge. They say nothing about 15 the fact that the bill is being sent for information purposes 16 17 and only in respect of the bank's lien interest on the house. And, in addition, they state, among other things, "Bank of 18 America N.A. will proceed with collection action until your 19 account is brought fully current." They do that on each bill. 20 And it says, "You are responsible for paying the bill." 21 Obviously, that language seeks to enforce a debt not simply in 22 respect of the house upon which Bank of America has or asserts 23 a mortgage but, instead, against the debtors directly and, 24 25 therefore, it is in contempt of the discharge order - clearly.

1 2 I would also note that to the extent that the 3 debtors through their counsel have represented to me at 4 today's hearing that the loan has been sold to someone else, 5 that very sale could be also in violation of the discharge 6 7 order. See In re Nassoko, 405 B.R. 520-22. Clearly the attorney's fees here are warranted as 8 9 actual damages. In addition, particularly given that Bank of America 10 knows how to do this properly, as evidenced by the two Western 11 12 District of Virginia cases that I've cited, coercive sanctions are warranted, and they're especially warranted given the fact 13 14 that Bank of America apparently has ignored this matter notwithstanding being served twice and having been given an 15 opportunity to correct the problem, which it has not done. 16 17 Instead, it has continued to send the bills. So it will be sanctioned $10,000.00 a month until it corrects this matter 18 19 payable to the debtors through their attorney. My reasoning behind that sanction is that this is not just a stupid 20 mistake. This is a policy. And frankly, $10,000.00 a month 21 plus attorney's fees may not mean much to Bank of America, but 22 at least it will send a message that other attorneys may pick 23 24 up on. 25 White Plains, New York Dated:
